WHAT I SAW IN TENNESSEE ...... V.

BY EDMUND KIRKE. Author of "Among the Pines."

Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1863, by J. R. Gri gons, in the Cierk's Office of the District Court of the Linux States for the Southern Dutriet of New York.

The next day was Sunday. I rose early, and going down to the office found my friend the Colonel already stirring. "Ah," he said, as I bade him "good morning," "I'm in luck. An orderly has come in with my horse, and an ambulance goes out under an escort this morning. In half an hour I can be off."

[Triune was distant only eighteen miles, but the road was infested with guerrillas, and was unsafe for single travelers.]
"I'm glad for that, on your account, but sorry on my own. I had reckoned on your aid in procuring access to my friends at the prison."

"You'll have no difficulty about that. Call on Col. Martin at the Capitol; tell him who you are, and he'll give you a permit." After breakfast, with mutual expressions of good will, we parted. I have formed many agreeable acquaintances while traveling, but never one more agreeable than the sturdy Indiana Colonel. He bad a frank, glowing, genial nature that attracted me irresistibly to him, just as one is attracted to a warm stand a sorry chance of gittin' inter the prison. Ye

If that was true, I was in a dilemma. I had prowided against such a contingency by taking with me, on leaving home, half a dozen introductory letters to Gov. Johnson, but that gertleman was not in Nashthey were of no present service.

As I sat down to ponder over "the situation " I anddenly remembered having heard that the son of an old friend was an officer in a Tennessee regiment Landlord," I said, addressing the publican-I ne told me he was also a Re-publican, but other v natworthy persons assured me he was at heart a rabid Tennessee is stationed?"

Here, Sir; 'bout two miles or at-nigh to Fort Neglev."

This was agreeable news, and writing a few lines to the young Tennesseean, in which I alluded to my long friendship with his fath er, and asked him "to come over" and help me, I dispatched a messenger at once to the camp. Ir , about an hour be returned, but with the unwelco me tidings that "de Cap'n am off, sar; off scoutin' at, sar, an day don't know token be'll be back, but dey recken he'll come yere, d'riely he come, sar; d' riele he come, sar."

The mornin' was slipping away while I was thus casting abor t for an escort, and I at last determined to do whe . I should have done at first-set out alone.

As I c' imbed the steep hill which leads to the Capitol, I was struck with the gloomy aspect of the sile .t, sember houses, and the noiseless, deserted the hour for morning service, but, with the exception of a solitary soldier, or a smartly-dressed darky, loitering idly along, no one was abroad. The whit population had mostly fled, and the few that remained elcomed the "Northern intruders" with bolted doors and barred windows. I realized I was walking the streets of a conquered city. Arrived at the Capitol-an imposing pile of white marble, more spacious and beautiful than any similar edifice in the with breastworks. Its marble steps were flanked by stockades, and its broad battlements crowned with artillery, which, from its elevated position, commanded the entire town and surrounding suburbs. In the distance, the Casino and Forts Negley and Confiscation looked down from rocky elevations, and beyond them a broad belt of military camps engirdled the captive city. To my unpracticed eye the and with what emotions must they be contemplated by Nashville's tobacco lords, who, wandering back from exile in Dixie, stand now and then on these own mad treason has shut them out from forever.

Approaching the sentinel at the principal stairway, I said: "Will you tell me where to find Col. Martin ? An' shoore an' I will, sir. Foiler the grand hall till ye come forninst the Guv'ners room-ye'll spy it over the dhoor-thin, say nothin' to nobody, but go stances.' straight in, Sir, an' ax fur the Cunnel, an' ye'll have what he said might not be exactly true.

You don't mean that."

"Troth, an' I does. I niver loiked the black divila-though them as is here ain't black, fur they's yaller-till I come out to fight fur 'em; but I've sort o' takin' to 'em since. An Irishman, ye knows, if he's niver a hapenny in his pocket, bas allers a fellerfeelin' fur a poor divil as is poorer thin he is-an' sorry a bit of anything in the world has the naygur. He don't own his own children, Sir; not aven the "Your kindred, where I live, are not of your way

" An' where may that be, yer honor?"

" In New-York."

"Oh, yis, I know; they's all Dimmocrats therean' Fernandy Wud Dimmocrats at that—bad luck to and a firmly cut mouth, showed him possessed of a thim. If you'd loike to kinvart 'em, Sir, jest send manly, determined character. I saw at a glance 'em out bere. I warrant ye they won't be four an' twenty 'cours in the State till they's Black Republicans -as black as the naygura themselves. An Irishman's a heart in him, Sir, an', be gorry, he can't see and then moved uneasily, as if in pain. Seeing this, she poor craytures widout havin' a feller feelin' fur I said:

" Well, good bye, and good luck to you."

"Good bye, an good luck to yerself, yer honor;" and he called out as I passed up the stairway, "Go straight on, yer honor, an' say nothin' to nobody; but ax fur the Cunnel, an' ye'll find him-right forning the Guv'ners room-ye mind-its over the dhoor."

I found the "Governor's room," in blazing gilt, " over the dhoor," and entered the opposite apartment. A number of clerks were sented around at camp desks writing, and a group of officers were lounging near a wisdow. Approaching the latter 1 asked for Col. Martin. " I am he, Sir," answered a tall, soldierly-looking young man, as he rose and made me a half military salute.
"I wish to learn if Col. — and Lieut. —

He hesitated a moment before replying, then said: " I really can't say, Sir. I don't remember the Do you, Major ?"

I'll return the favor to the first one your 'countrymen' that falls into my hands."

Thus entreated, I could not decline. As I took the proffered seat, I glanced around the apartment. It was spacious and well lighted by mullioned windows at its two ends. Along its sides were ranged half a dozen camp beds; and as many chairs, and two small tables straggled about the floor. Its walls were not over-cleanly, but the floor was nicely sanded, and the whole room had a tidy, comfortable appearance. It was evidently reserved for the better class of political prisoners. Its then occupant was a man of about thirty-five, and of decidedly prepossessing appearance. He had a fine, intellectual face, and long, brown hair, as soft and glossy as a woman's; but a full, dark eye, wide, strong jaws, he was no common man. He was dressed in the Confederate uniform, and as he lay on the outside of his cot, in a half recumbent attitude, he every now

Walter Brown's Monthly Wool Circular.

We have to report a doil market in Demectic Pircess addring the peat month, caused by the extreme figures at which farmers have held their wools in the country, and the morallingness of manufacturers to pay such prices, even in this market, while there crists so much doubt as to what goods will bring when made. In such a state of affairs we cannot expect much activity, and should this dullness continue, growers may have to accept considerably less for their wool intended to the early part of the season; still, while everything is so unestites, and so many and various causes are opensing upon the interests of the trade, it is almost impossible for any one to predict with any dottee of certainty the state of the market in the fours, and those best acqueinted with the business confess themselves if held. We are of opinion, however, that extreme prices will not prevail this year, on nocomn of the large stock of foreign weeds more in market with are being brought considerably more into use than ever before, thus leasening in corresponding degree, the demand for Domestie Wools.

But little of the new clip has come to market; what has been bought in the West has been chiefly for manufactures, and they now wish that their porchases had been snowler. The market for Pulled Wool has also been deall, and athough the stong is light, prices have declined. There has been not little done in California Wools, the stone in market is now quite liberal, and manufacturers will do woil to turn their attention to them, as they partake largely of the character of our Domestie Wools, and for meany ainds of gools answer equally well.

There has been more activity manifested in Foreign Wool, and some large sales have been made at reduced prices. By our foreign circulars just received, we notice that the regular site of a price flower, and for meany ainds of gools answer equally well.

There has been more activity manifested in Foreign Wool, and some large, so when have been made at reduced prices. B
